HARDING COMING WEST.

The intimation that the republican presidential candidate is not going to confine his campaign efforts to the front porch plan will meet with the unanimous approval of electors in the remote sections of the west. What is more, it must be conceded that the idea of obtaining that the hundred millions of the nation should step up to the family residence at Marion, Ohio, if they wish to see one of the equidistant is too strictly provincial to meet with the sanction of those whose votes will decide the name of the next occupant of the White House. Some of the old foggy so-called conservatives prefer this system of having the multitudes march to Marion rather than have the candidate go out on a hand-shaking get-acquainted trip. Voters are not going to fall over themselves seeking a candidate, for most of them are just a little stiff-necked on that proposition and think that it is more in the line of duty for Mohamed to go to the mountain since the mountain cannot go to Mohamed. It costs too much money for these excursions, and it is going to cost a heap more. No man of practical ideas would consider for a moment the suggestion that 20,000,000 voters should go to see the candidate when it is so easy for the candidate to go to see them in their native habitat. It would be an exquisitely clever thing for the railroads to throw this travel to the Ohio home town, but it will probably occur to the campaign managers that more votes are to be made by swinging around the circle than by staying at home in an environment that is not conducive to the extension business. Marion would make money at the expense of the nation and the thought that it required money to see the man asking for your vote would naturally cause a revulsion of feeling among the most enthusiastic followers of the grand old party. If it be headed as a showman's trick to run around the country and shake hands with the horny-handed sons of toil, it may be said in defense that this pasture has been accepted as one of the modern appanages of the presidential nomination for which there cannot be any escape. Between the two plans of exhibiting the candidate on his front porch or on the rear platform of a swiftly moving train there cannot be any argument. The people want to see the man who is asking for their votes, and if he is not willing to make the rounds and the rival candidate proves a hail-fellow well-met, then the management must be ready for nomination for the presidency of a Sunday school.

NO JURY TRIALS FOR THE IRISH.

It has come to the unmasking of the motives of the British government in abolishing trial by jury for the Irish people. The duplicity of Lloyd George and his fellow conspirators is plainly seen in the statement that the new regulation is for the benefit of part of the Irish people and not for the country at large. A more vicious measure could not be conceived by an enlightened government, since it is accompanied by the frank statement that it is strictly a partisan measure designed to coerce one branch of the Irish while not applying to the north, which for years has been in open rebellion against the British government. No doubt this condition exists, since it is only two weeks ago that Sir Robert Carson, the Ulster leader, openly threatened the British power with revolt in the event that any clemency is manifested toward the majority of the population. The North of Ireland has been the hotbed of disloyalty to the crown through the unnumbered acts of its leaders in declaring for hostilities in the war of extermination was not waged with unrelenting bitterness against the southern and central sections of unhappy Erin. A parallel may readily be found in the action of the southern confederacy in defying the administration of President Lincoln and a majority of the American citizenry which led to firing on the flag at Sumter. The little Welshman who guides the destinies of the British empire might well be reproached in the language made world-famous through the letters of "Junius," which created such a stir in English circles in the eighteenth century addressed to the most eminent advisers to the crown, wherein he writes: "You are no longer the resolute minister who had such spirit to support the most violent measures, who compensated for the want of good and great qualities by a brave determination to maintain himself without them. The reputation of obstinacy and perseverance might have supplied the place of all the absent virtues. You now have added the last negative to your character and manfully confessed that you are destitute of the common spirit of man. Retire then, my lord, and hide your blushes from the world; for with such a load of shame even black may change its color. A mind such as yours, in the solitary hours of domestic enjoyment, may still find topics of consolation. You may find in it the memory of violated friendship, in the afflictions of an accomplished prince whom you have disgraced and deserted and in the agitation of a great country, driven by your counsels, to the brink of destruction."

But, my lord, since you have labored to destroy the substance of the trial why should you suffer the form to remain? Why force 12 honest men, in palpable violation of their oaths, to pronounce their fellow subjects guilty men when, almost at the same moment, you forbid them enquiring into the only circumstance, which, in the eye of law and reason, constitute guilt—the malignity or innocence of his intentions? If you could succeed in making the trial by jury useless and ridiculous, you might then, with greater safety, introduce a bill into parliament for enlarging the jurisdiction of the court and extending your favorite trial by interrogatories to every question in which the life and liberty of an Englishman is concerned."

American institutions can stand discussion and criticism, only if those who know hear for them the testimony of the truth. Such repression and such testimony should be forthcoming, that the uninformed may come to a full realization that these seditious efforts are not for their welfare, but for their complete economic and political destruction.

GERMAN WARSHIP DUE THIS WEEK

(Correspondence of Associated Press) WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Four of the German warships allocated to the United States for experimental purposes were in the thick of the battle in the battle of Jutland, according to naval intelligence records here. The vessels are due at New York from Brest, France, this week, and under a clause of the peace treaty they must be destroyed within one year after their arrival. The light cruiser Frankfort, now a wreck in machinery and being towed to the United States by the transport Hancock, was the first ship in the German battleline when it collided with the British grand fleet while the 22,000-ton dreadnought Oosterschelde was the ninth ship in the line, immediately in the rear of the flagship of the German command-in-chief, Admiral Scheer. Of the three destroyers, all of which are being towed over as a result of their submersion with the German fleet at Scapa Flow, the G. 192 and the V. 42 were in the forefront of the fighting throughout the Jutland engagement.

FILIPINO BOYS ARE STOWAWAYS

(Correspondence of Associated Press) MANILA, P. I., June 15.—Owing to the increasing numbers of Filipino stowaways on vessels leaving here for the United States, the Pacific Mail company has adopted the plan of stopping its departing ships several miles out in Manila bay while a thorough search is made for stowaways. If any are found, they are put off in a launch.

The number of Filipino stowaways has grown so large that it has become a serious problem, steamship agents say. More Filipinos are going to the United States now, steamship agents assert than at any time since American occupation. Most of them are students who desire to work their way through school in America, while a few are impelled by a spirit of adventure to make the trip. Reports reaching here say that many of the Filipinos in the Pacific coast cities are poorly fed and housed and are suffering hardships in a number of cases.
